The boy then takes a place in the ring and the girl remains in the centre and chooses a boy in her turn, Gomme Games (1898) II. 199.] Ir. There's another game [at funeral wakes] they call silly ould man, that's played this way:—A ring of the boys and girls is made on the flure—boy and girl about—houlding one another by the hands; well and good—a young man gets into the middle of the ring, as 'the silly ould man.' There he stands looking at all the girls to choose a wife, and in the mane time the youngsters of the ring sing out—'Here's a silly ould man that lies all alone, . . . He wants a wife and he can get none.' When the boys and girls sing this, the silly ould man must choose a wife from some of the colleens belonging to the ring. Having made choice of her, she goes into the ring along with him and they all sing out—'Now, young couple, you're married together, . . you must obey your father and mother, and love one another like sister and brother; I pray, young couple, you'll kiss together,' and you may be sure this part of the marriage is not missed anyway, Carleton Traits Peas. (ed. 1836) I. 262. Dub. A girl is first in the centre. (1) w.Sc. Persons who were called in when any one died to eat the sins of the deceased. When they came their modus operandi was to place a plate of salt and a plate of bread on the breast of the corpse, and repeat a series of incantations, after which they ate the contents of the plates, and so relieved the dead person of such sins as would have kept him hovering around his relations, Napier Flk-Lore (1879) 60. Hrf. An old custom at funerals, to hire poor people who were to take upon them the sins of the party deceased. One of them, . . I remember, lived in a cottage on Rosse highway. The manner was, that when the corpse was brought out of the house, and laid on the bier, a loaf of bread was brought out, and delivered to the sin-eater, over the corpse, as also a mazard bowl of maple, full of beer (which he was to drink), and sixpence in money, in consideration whereof he took upon him all the sins of the defunct, and freed him or her from walking after they were dead, Hone Year Bk. (1832) 858, in N. & Q. (1851) 1st S. iv. 211. Cth. The superstition of the sin-eater is said to linger even now in the secluded vale of Cwm Amman. When a person died, the friends sent for the sin-eater of the district, who on his arrival placed a plate of salt on the breast of the deceased, and on the salt a piece of bread. He then muttered an incantation over the bread, which he finally eat, thereby eating the sins of the dead person. This done, he received the fee of 2*s.* 6*d.*, and vanished as quickly as he could, the friends helping his departure by the aid of sundry blows and kicks, if they could catch him, Murray Handbk. s.Wal. (1860) Introd. 26. Also in comp. Skimmington-ride; and in phr. to ride Skimmington. Cf. ride, II. 1 (9), (21).

n.Yks.$^2$ Some say this is an imported expression and means the same as our riding the stang. Others state that riding Skimmington had something different in the performance, but in what that difference consisted we cannot effectually learn. The same in purpose, or nearly so, it exhibited a man at one end of a long pole and a female at the other, suspended by rows of men on each side for the double weight; while she is said to have displayed a chemise by way of banner, expanded at the end of a staff, with the usual tumult on such occasions (s.v. Riding the Stang). se.Wor.$^1$ It usually consists of a procession, in which effigies of the objectionable persons are carried through the village accompanied by beating of tin kettles and other discordant noises. Under particular circumstances, certain articles of wearing apparel are carried on sticks, after the manner of flags or banners. The performance concludes with the burning of the effigies. . . A Skimmington performance took place at Little Comberton, as recently as the beginning of the present year (1893). Ken. N. & Q. (1869) 4th S. iii. 529, 608. Hmp. (H.C.M.B.), Hmp.$^1$ Wil. Slow Gl. (1892); Wil.$^1$ A serenade of rough music got up to express disapproval in cases of great scandal and immorality. The orthodox procedure in n.Wil. is as follows: the party assembles before the houses of the offenders, armed with tin pots and pans, and performs a serenade for three successive nights. Then after an interval of three nights the serenade is repeated for three more. Then another interval of the same duration and a third repetition of the rough music for three nights—nine nights in all. On the last night the effigies of the offenders are burnt. Dor. I say what a good foundation for a skimmity-ride, Hardy Mayor of Casterbridge (1886) xxxvi. w.Dor. Roberts Hist. Lyme Regis (1834). Som. The turf-cutters, t'other zide o' Chris'boro', an' the men about here, they had . . . a 'skimmerton riden,' . . an' they meade a straa figure of him as 'ud ruin'd an' then deserted poor Mary, Leith Lemon Verbena (1895) 107; An exhibition of riding by two persons on a horse, back to back; or of several persons in a cart, having skimmers and ladles, with which they carry on a sort of warfare or gambols, designed to ridicule some one who unfortunately possesses an unfaithful wife. . . It occurs, however, at the present time, very rarely, and will soon, I apprehend, be quite obs., Jennings Obs. Dial. w.Eng. (1825); I know not if the custom is ever practised now. It is well remembered here, and several now living have incurred the disgrace. 'It's down-right wicked, I call it. Stupid old thing—she ought to be skimmerton-rid for going on like that' (W.F.R.). e.Som. The effigy of a man or woman unfaithful to marriage vows carried on a pole accompanied by rough music from cows'-horns and frying-pans. Formerly it consisted of two persons riding on a horse back to back, with ladles and marrow-bones in hand, and was intended to ridicule a hen-pecked husband, W. & J. Gl. (1873). w.Som.$^1$ A mob demonstration against conjugal offenders, still by no means infrequent. A very old doggrel often yelled out by those who are skimity riding, is: 'Now [Jimsy Hart], if thee disn mend thy manners, The skin of thy ass we'll zend to the tanner's; And if the tanner, he on't tan un well, We'll hang un pon a naail in hell; And if the nail beginth to crack, We'll hang un 'pon the devil's back; And if the devil urnth away, We'll hang un there another day.' Dev. An event that took place in Rockbeare some ten or fifteen years ago. . . A figure was dressed to represent a caricature of an inhabitant of the parish who was believed to have been unfaithful to his wife; the image was robed in a nightshirt, and mounted on a donkey, and then driven through the village, Reports Provinc. (1891); The villagers elected some one to act a hunted stag; the others, some mounted and in hunting or other costumes, with horns, acted huntsmen and hounds. The stag, disguised with antlers, &c., was hunted through the village lanes, &c., and brought down near the offender's door; where there was blowing of horns, shouting, and spilling of blood, brought in a bladder, to make scene realistic, Flk-Lore Rec. (1882) V. 167; Dev.$^1$ n.Dev. The procession consists of two stuffed figures of a man and woman on horseback, back to back, preceded by a man carrying a pair of ram's horns on a pole or on his head, followed by noisy music of ladles, pots, frying-pans, &c., and smacking of whips. After the procession the horns are nailed up sometimes to the church porch. The rustics have a tradition that by using this ceremony they can legally establish a cattle fair, Flk-Lore Jrn. (1883) I. 365; To establish for the parish the right of holding an annual fair for cattle, the tolls of which are first offered to the delinquent husband, and, if refused, then to the lord of the manor, N. & Q. (1854) 1st S. x. 165. They are still used for heavy weights where roads are not available. Nhb., Dur. A wooden frame upon which the corves were drawn previous to the introduction of wheels and rails, and still used occasionally in leading to a stow-board, Nicholson Coal Tr. Gl. (1888); Dur.$^1$, Lakel.$^1$, Cum.$^4$ Wm. Hay is taken in peat 'sleds,' Gent. Mag. (May 1890) 529. n.Yks.$^1$ A means of carriage often used in time of snow to carry corn to the mill, turnips from the field to the owshus; also in leading peats or other moor-fuel down the extremely steep tracks or roadways. The sled is also used for the transference of harrows, ploughs, &c., from the farmstead to the field, or from one field to another; n.Yks.$^{234}$ e.Yks. Marshall Rur. Econ. (1788); e.Yks.$^1$, m.Yks.$^1$, w.Yks.$^{23}$ Lan. He darted into the house with his wooden 'sled' upon his back, Waugh Old Cronies (1875) iii; Lan.$^1$, ne.Lan.$^1$, e.Lan.$^1$, s.Lan.$^1$ Chs.$^1$ An implement for drawing a plough from one place to another. It is formed of a slab of wood with the round side downwards; and into the flat upper surface is driven a large square staple. The plough is then lifted bodily on to the sled, and the point of the plough suck put through the staple; the whole thing is then drawn by a horse much more readily than if the plough itself were dragged upon the ground; and there is no risk of the plough being broken. The horse is yoked to the plough, not to the sled. Thus the plough pushes the sled along. Der. English Mining Terms; Der.$^1$, n.Lin.$^1$, Hrf.$^1$, e.An.$^1$, Suf.$^1$ [Amer. He'd get the sleds into the woods and get 'em loaded up, *Cent. SLUB, v.$^2$ and sb.$^2$ Yks. Lan. Wor. Som. Also in form slob Wor. [slub.] 1. v. To draw out and slightly twist wool or cotton so as to make a long thread; see below. Cf. slubber, v.$^2$

w.Yks.$^3$; w.Yks.$^5$ The first process in the manufacture of cloth which forms a thread. After the wool is carded (a carding-machine levels and divides the wool into short breadths or 'cards') it goes through the 'Billy,' (another machine of a certain number of spindles—generally sixty to one hundred) being joined by the 'piecer'-lads by a slight movement of the hand. The 'Billy' running out, stops at a certain distance, when a beam falls, and the threads being stretched put the twist into them, and this continuously; the former movement producing fineness, and the latter strength. The distance at which the stretching process begins, regulates the fineness of the thread, which is ordered, when in the card, to be slubbed so many skeins—the higher the number, the finer the material; and being wound on the spindles are afterwards detached, and are styled 'slubbings.' After the slubbing process comes the mule-spinning, and then the weaving. e.Lan.$^1$ To give fibrous substances, as cotton, the first twisting previous to spinning. s.Lan.$^1$, w.Som.$^1$

Hence (1) Slubber, sb., obs., a workman engaged in 'slubbing'; a spinner; (2) Slubbing, sb. a long thread of slightly twisted cotton or woollen yarn; (3) Slubbing-Billy, sb. the machine used in the process of 'slubbing.'

n.Ir. To be met with in the form of 'snakes set here' on notice-boards all over the north of Ireland. The 'snakes' are nothing more than pieces of iron roughly formed by the nearest blacksmith into a weapon of the shape of a double-barbed fishing-hook. The stem, instead of being bent as in the fishing-hook, is kept straight and driven into a small block of wood. This block of wood, with the weapon upwards, is planted in the ground in such a manner that the weapon will pierce the foot of any one treading upon it. The double barbs made the trespasser unable to withdraw it without wounding his foot still more. . . Usually the notice 'snakes set here' is sufficient to keep off straying feet, N. & Q. (1869) 4th S. vii. 284; Sharp knives set upright in the ground beneath fruit-trees for the purpose of preserving them from thieves. I believe this dangerous and cruel practice is now illegal, ib. 284; N.I.$^1$ The snakes are supposed to be iron spikes, fixed point upwards in the ground. Tyr. Here I observed to-day on a tree the notice or warning 'snakes here,' Walking Tour (1865) in N. & Q. ib. 252; I observed a notice painted on a board in a small garden as follows: 'Bewar of sneks.' At first I confess that this brief caution puzzled me a little, and at the moment I concluded that it could only mean 'Beware of snakes.' This, however, it turned out . . . was nothing more nor less than the technical name for a species of our man-traps, so constructed as to seize hold of the legs of those who happened to be caught in it, Barrow Tour (1835) ib.

s.Not. It was played with small stones or marbles. There were nine sets of tricks. First One-ers (of which there were five in a set), then Two-ers (two in set), Three-ers (three in set), Four-ers (four in set), Four Squares (four in set), Trotting Donkeys (eight in set, I believe), Fly-catchers (six or seven in set), Magic (five in set), and Magic Fly-catchers (five in set). One-ers is played thus: The five stones are thrown into the air and caught on the back of the hand. If all are caught they are simply tossed up again and caught in the hollow of the hand, but if any are not caught they have to be picked up, one by one, another stone being at the same time thrown into the air and caught with the one picked up in the hand. Two-ers, Three-ers, and Four-ers are played in the same way, except that the stones not caught on the back of the hand have to be arranged in twos, threes, and fours respectively by the hand on which the caught stones are lying meanwhile, and then each lot has to be picked up altogether. In Magic the play is just the same as in One-ers, except that instead of only throwing up a single stone and catching it as the others are in turn picked up, the whole number except those remaining to be picked up are thrown and caught. In Four Squares, four of the stones are arranged in a square, each of them is then picked up, whilst the remaining stone is flung upwards and caught; the one picked up is then tossed up and the one originally tossed up is put down in the place of the other, which is caught as it descends, and the process repeated 'all round the square.' Trotting Donkeys is similarly played except that the four stones are arranged in a line. . . Fly-catchers is played like One-ers except that the stone thrown into the air . . . is not simply caught by being allowed to fall into the hand, but by an outward movement of the hand is pounced on, hawk-fashion, from above. Magic Fly-catchers is played in precisely the same way, except that as in simple Magic not one stone but all are thrown up and caught, Gomme Games (1894) I. 123; Played with a number of shreds of earthenware or the like (J.P.K.).

(1) Ken. Marshall Review (1817) V. 429. (2) Chs.$^{1}$ Sod-drains were constructed in the following manner:—The sod was carefully pared off and laid on one side. A trench was then cut to the required depth, leaving it about a foot wide at the bottom. Along the middle of the bottom a channel, nine or ten inches deep and four or five inches wide, was cut with a narrow rounded spade. A tool similar to those still in use for the bottoms of drains was drawn along the channel to level it for the flow of water; and then this bottom channel was covered with the sod laid grass-side downwards, and the drain filled up again. These drains were very effectual and inexpensive. . . Another method of sod-draining was to cut a quantity of sods the size and shape of bricks, and with them to build up a drain at the bottom of the trench exactly like an ordinary brick drain, covering them as in the other system with surface sods laid grass-side downwards. (3) n.Yks.$^{1}$ 'He reeks like a sod-heap'; of a person smoking tobacco so diligently as to envelope himself in smoke. SOKE, sb. Obs. Sc. n.Cy. Yks. Lin. Also written soak Yks. N.Cy.$^1$; and in forms sock Sc. (Jam.); sooac e.Yks. 1. A particular district over which the feudal lord formerly exercised jurisdiction.

n.Yks. Fifteen carucates of land, and had soke besides . . . to the extent of $28\frac{3}{4}$ carucates more. . . Six carucates and soke of 20 carucates additional, Atkinson Whitby (1894) 100. w.Yks. I've heard thee crying aght agean't Wakefield soak, Tom Treddlehoyle Bairnsla Ann. (Apr. 18, 1850); Until quite recently, . . a portion of Manningham was included within the area covered by the rights of soke, Cudworth Manningham (1896) 8. n.Lin.$^1$ In many of the townships the whole area was included in the manor and soke, in others but a very small portion; for example, in Bottesford there was but seventy-six acres, and somewhat less in Yaddlethorpe.

2. Comp. Sock-man, a tenant of a particular district subjected by his lease to certain restrictions and bound to perform certain services.

Abd. (Jam.); The parish is accommodated with seven corn-mills, to some of which the tenants of a certain district, called . . . sock-men . . . are astricted, Statist. Acc. XVII. 407 (ib.).

3. An exclusive privilege of grinding corn within the 'soke' attached to certain mills; the miller's due for grinding.

N.Cy.$^1$ e.Yks. Some trials at law relative to this ancient privilege have lately taken place; but the millers have generally been cast. It seems, however, to be understood, that an alien miller has no right to ask publicly for corn to be ground in a parish which has a corn-mill belonging to it. A horn may nevertheless be sounded, or a bell be rung, Marshall Rur. Econ. (1796) II. w.Yks. If you don't send your corn to his mill, He'll sue you, for breaking the soke, sir, Jackson Chron. Craven, 22.

[Unless this word has been borrowed from the lit. language, there are phonological difficulties in the way of its being identical with OE. sōc, sōcn, jurisdiction.]

(1) S. & Ork.$^1$ (2) n.Sc., Abd., Rnf. Among the many superstitious ceremonies performed on Fastern's-een by the younger people of both sexes, that of the sooty-scone holds a distinguished place. It is the usual custom on that evening to make 'skair-scones.' . When a sufficient quantity of skair-scones is prepared, as much of the substance is left—into which a quantity of soot is stirred, and a marriage ring is put—as will make a large and thick scone, which is called the sooty-scone, and in which all the magic is believed to consist. She, who prepares the sooty-scone, must keep . . . silence whilst it is baking, for, if she speak, all its virtues are lost; and when it is baked, it is divided into as many portions as there are unmarried guests; each of whom, blindfolded, draws a part. The person who . . . draws the piece containing the ring is assured of being the first married of the company; and to know who their intended partner will be, the piece of cake is dreamt on, i.e. placed under the pillow in the left foot stocking, and whatsoever person is dreamt of, he or she is viewed as the future husband or wife of the dreamer. This power of looking into futurity, however, is not confined to the person who obtained the ring, but, by the mystical virtues of the sooty-scone, is alike equal to all who partook of it; the ring only conferring the privilege of being the first married of the company (JAM.). (3) Nhb.$^1$

2. Comb. (1) Sops and ale, obs., see below; (2) — in wine, a species of apple.

(1) Sus.$^{1}$ A curious custom formerly prevalent at Eastbourne. The senior bachelor of the parish was elected by the inhabitants to the office of steward, and had committed to his charge a damask napkin, a great wooden bowl, twelve wooden trenchers, a dozen wooden knives and forks, two wooden candlesticks, and two wooden sugar basins. Whenever a matron within the parish increased her family, it was the duty of this official to go to the church door on the Sunday fortnight after the interesting event, and there publicly proclaim that sops and ale would be provided that evening at a certain house agreed upon, where the following arrangements were made. Three tables were placed in some convenient room, one of which was covered with the damask table cover and furnished with a china bowl, plates, and silver-handled knives and forks; the bowl was filled with biscuits steeped in wine and sweetened with fine sugar. The second table was also covered with a cloth and decently provided with knives, forks and china, and a bowl containing beer-sops sweetened with fine sugar. The third table had no cloth, was furnished with the wooden trenchers, candlesticks, &c., and had its wooden bowl filled with beer-sops sweetened with the coarsest sugar. After evening prayers the company assembled at the house of their entertainer, and were placed in the following order:—Those persons whose wives had presented them with twins sat at the first table, and were addressed as ‘benchers’; those whose partners had blessed them in a less degree were ranged round the second table; while those who were married but childless, were placed with the old bachelors at the third table. Various toasts were given, and the company always broke up at the hour of eight. (2) Cor.$^{3}$

I hope you will prove kind with your "aples" and strong beer, And we'll come no more a-souling until this time next year.' (2) 'One for Peter, one for Paul, One for Him as made us all! Up with your kettles and down with your pans, Give us a sou'-cake and we will be gone,' N. & Q. (1868) 4th S. ii. 553; In the parishes on and round a hill called Mow Cop . . . on All Souls' Eve children go in bands from house to house singing ballads. . . Some kind of cake may once have been made for them, but they now get only common biscuits, nuts, apples, pears, and the like. . . The following they chant to a pretty tune: 'Ye gentlemen of England, I'd have you to draw near To these few lines which we have penned, and quickly you shall hear Sweet melody of music upon the evening clear. God bless the master of this house, &c. Step down into your cellar and see what you can find: If your barrel be not empty we hope you will prove kind,' &c., ib. (1867) 3rd S. xii. 479. Stf. On All Saints' Day, the poor people . . . go from parish to parish a Souling, as they call it, Tollet Notes Shakespeare in Brand Pop. Antiq. (ed. 1813) I. 309. Der.$^2$ Shr. On the 2nd of November, All Souls' Day, it is the custom for the village children to go round to all their neighbours souling, as they call it, collecting small contributions and singing the following verses. . . 'Soul! soul! for a soul-cake; Pray, good mistress, for a soul-cake; One for Peter, two for Paul, Three for Them who made us all. Soul! soul! for an apple or two; If you've got no apples, pears will do; Up with your kettle and down with your pan; Give me a good big one, and I'll be gone. Soul! soul! for a soul-cake, Pray, good mistress, a soul-cake, &c. An apple or pear, a plum or a cherry, Is a very good thing to make us merry. Soul! soul!' &c., N. & Q. (1851) 1st S. iv. 381; Up to the present time in many places, poor children, and sometimes men, go out 'souling,' which means that they go round to the houses of all the more well-to-do people within reach, reciting a 'ditty' peculiar to the day and looking for a dole of cakes, broken victuals, ale, apples or money. The latter two are now the usual rewards, Burne Flk-Lore (1883) 381; Your streets is very dirty, The night is very cold, And this night to come a-souling We do make bold, ib. 385. Pem. The appeal for gifts at this season (New Year's Day) by 'tooling,' 'sowling,' and 'the cutty wren,' N. & Q. (1872) 4th S. x. 267. s.Pem. To beg alms at Christmastide (W.M.M.); Laws Little Eng. (1888) 421.

(7, a) Shr. Burne Flk-Lore (1883) 381. (b) Chs. (J.Ar.) (8) Chs.$^1$ 509. s.Chs.$^1$ The following are the two versions of the 'souling-song,' used by the children: 'Soul, soul, a apple or two; If ye han noo apples, pears 'un do; Please, good Missis, a soul-cake; Put yur hand i' yur pocket, Tak aït yur keys, Go daïn i' yur cellar, Bring what yŏ please, A apple, a pear, A plum, or a cherry, Or any good thing That'll make us all merry.' Or the following is preferred if the party wish to 'soul' for money rather than fruit: 'Soul, soul, a apple or two; If ye han noo apples, pears 'un do; Please, good Missis, a soul-cake. The lanes are very dirty, My shoes are very thin; I've a little pocket To put a penny in. One for Peter, Two for Paul, Three for them That made us all.' If there be no response to this touching appeal, the children run away, shouting derisively, 'Soul, soul, A lump o' coal.' The 'souling-song' commonly in vogue with farm servants runs as follows: 'Here are two or three hearty lads, All in a mind; We are come a-soulin', Good nature to find. Go daïn i' yur cellar, See what yŏ can find—Ale, beer, or brandy, Or the best of all wine; But if you will give us One jug of your beer, We'll come nŏ more a-soulin', Until another 'ear.' Shr. Burne Flk-Lore (1883) 385; I am reminded just now by the children who are singing their 'souling-song' under my window, N. & Q. (1878) 5th S. x. 426.

'A soum of grass,' as much as will pasture one cow or five sheep (Jam.). n.Sc. If a tenant is to hire his grazing in the hills he takes it by soumes. A soume is as much grass as will maintain four sheep; eight sheep are equal to a cow and a half or forty goats, Lett. from a Gentleman, II. 155 (ib.). Arg. One cow makes a soum, a horse two; ten sheep (and in some places fewer) are considered as a soum, Statist. Acc. XII. 477 note (ib.); The glebe . . . is supposed to be legal as to extent with 4 soums grass in common with the cattle of the farm, ib. VIII. 104 (ib.). s.Sc. Sax sooms o' sheep ware a' their stock That gaed amang the maister's flock, T. 2. Phr. sowm and rowm, a pasture in summer and fodder in winter. Sc. Morton Cyclo. Agric. (1863).

3. v. To fix the number of cattle, sheep, or horses to be kept on land which is held by more than one proprietor or tenant.

Sc. 'To soum land,' to calculate and fix what number of cattle or sheep it can properly support (Jam.). Inv. (H.E.F.) Per. Where there are several small tenants upon one farm, the farm is (what they call) soumed; which means, that the number of cattle it can properly maintain or pasture is ascertained, that none of the tenants may exceed his just proportion nor over-stock his farm, Statist. Acc. VI. 93 (Jam.). Rxb. It seems probable, that the land outfield in many places was occupied in common, each proprietor or tenant in a certain district, parish, or estate having been thereby entitled to soum or pasture on the outfield land in summer in proportion to the number and kinds of cattle he was thus able to roum or fodder in winter, by means of his share of infield land, ib. XV. 473 note.

Hence a process, or action, of souming and rouming, phr. the action by which these proportions are ascertained.

Sc. An action of sowming and rowming, two old words denoting the form of law by which the number of cattle that each proprietor may put on the common is fixed, according to the different kinds of cattle that are to pasture upon it, Erskine Inst. bk. ii. tit. ix. sec. 15 (Jam.); She sune made her fu' purse a toom ane, By raising a Process o' Soumin' an' Roumin', Outram Lyrics (1887) 63; The action or suit, which is unknown in modern times, was one which might be instituted by any proprietor of lands adjacent to a commonty in which he and other proprietors had a common or joint right, ib. 62. Inv. (H.E.F.)

(1) Bnff.$^1$ (2, a) Sc. Gregor Flk-Lore (1881) 157. (b) Lnk. Baked in the burgh of Rutherglen for St. Luke's Fair. This began on the 3rd Monday of October (Jam.); Another ancient custom for the observance of which Rutherglen has long been famous is the baking of sour cakes. About eight or ten days before St. Luke's Fair, . . a certain quantity of oatmeal is made into dough with warm water, and laid up in a vessel to ferment. Being brought to a proper degree of fermentation and consistency, it is rolled up into balls, proportionable to the intended largeness of the cakes. With the dough is commonly mixed a small quantity of sugar and a little anise seed or cinnamon. The baking is executed by women only, and they seldom begin their work till after sunset and a night or two before the fair. A large space of the house, chosen for the purpose, is marked out by a line drawn upon it; the area within is considered as consecrated ground. . . This hallowed spot is occupied by six or eight women, all of whom except the toaster seat themselves on the ground in a circular figure, having their feet turned towards the fire. The woman who toasts the cakes, which is done on a girdle suspended over the fire, is called the queen or bride, and the rest are called her maidens. These are distinguished from one another by names given them for the occasion. She who sits next the fire towards the east is called the Todler; her companion on the left hand is called the Hodler. . . The operation is begun by the todler, who takes a ball of the dough, forms it into a small cake, and then casts it on the bakeboard of the hodler, who beats it out a little thinner. . . She on her turn throws it on the board of her neighbour, and thus it goes round . . . until it comes to the toaster, by which time it is as thin and smooth as a sheet of paper, Ure Hist. Rutherglen (1793) 94–97 (ib.). 9. A game; see below. Also in comp. Sow-in-the-kirk.

Lth. A pretty large hole is made in the ground, surrounded by smaller ones according to the number of the company, every one of whom has a shintie. The middle hole is called the kirk. He who takes the lead in the game is designed the sow-driver. His object is to drive a small piece of wood or bone, called the sow, into the large hole or kirk, while that of his opponents, every one of whom keeps his shintie in one of the smaller holes, is to frustrate his exertions by driving back the sow. If he succeeds either in knocking it into the kirk or in clapping his shintie into one of the small holes while one of his antagonists is in the act of striking back the sow, he is released from the drudgery of being driver. In the latter case the person whose vacancy he has occupied takes the servile station which he formerly held (Jam.).
